However, there are also some Batman stories that, while not as well-known, are nonetheless worthy of attention. One such story is "The Big Blunder," written by Paul Kupperberg and published in Batman #323-324 in 1978.

"The Big Blunder" is a unique and entertaining story that features the unlikely pairing of Batman and Bat-Mite, a mischievous imp from the fifth dimension. Together, they must face the consequences of underestimating the power of laughter.

The Story

The story begins with Batman investigating a series of bizarre crimes. The victims are all seemingly normal citizens who have suddenly become obsessed with laughter. They laugh uncontrollably, even in the most inappropriate situations.

Batman soon discovers that the culprit is Bat-Mite, who has come to Earth with the intention of making Batman laugh. Bat-Mite believes that laughter is the best way to defeat evil, and he is determined to make Batman see the error of his ways.

However, Batman is not amused. He sees Bat-Mite as a nuisance and a threat. He refuses to laugh, and he vows to stop Bat-Mite's reign of terror.

As the two of them clash, they begin to realize that there is more to each other than they first thought. Batman learns that Bat-Mite is not as harmless as he seems, and Bat-Mite learns that Batman is not as serious as he pretends to be.

In the end, Batman and Bat-Mite come to a truce. They realize that they can work together to defeat the forces of evil, even if they have different methods.

The Legacy of "The Big Blunder"
