On a recent Saturday night, the Hooleygan Music Mayhem series brought a night of pure rock 'n' roll mayhem to the stage at the historic Granada Theater in Dallas, Texas. The lineup featured four high-energy bands that kept the crowd on their feet all night long, delivering a raucous performance that left everyone in attendance begging for more.

The night kicked off with a set by local favorites The Sour Notes. The band's high-energy brand of punk rock got the crowd moving, and their infectious enthusiasm set the tone for the rest of the night. Next up was San Francisco's The Dwarves, who brought their own brand of mayhem to the stage. The band's raucous performance was full of energy and passion, and they had the crowd moshing and headbanging along to their every song.

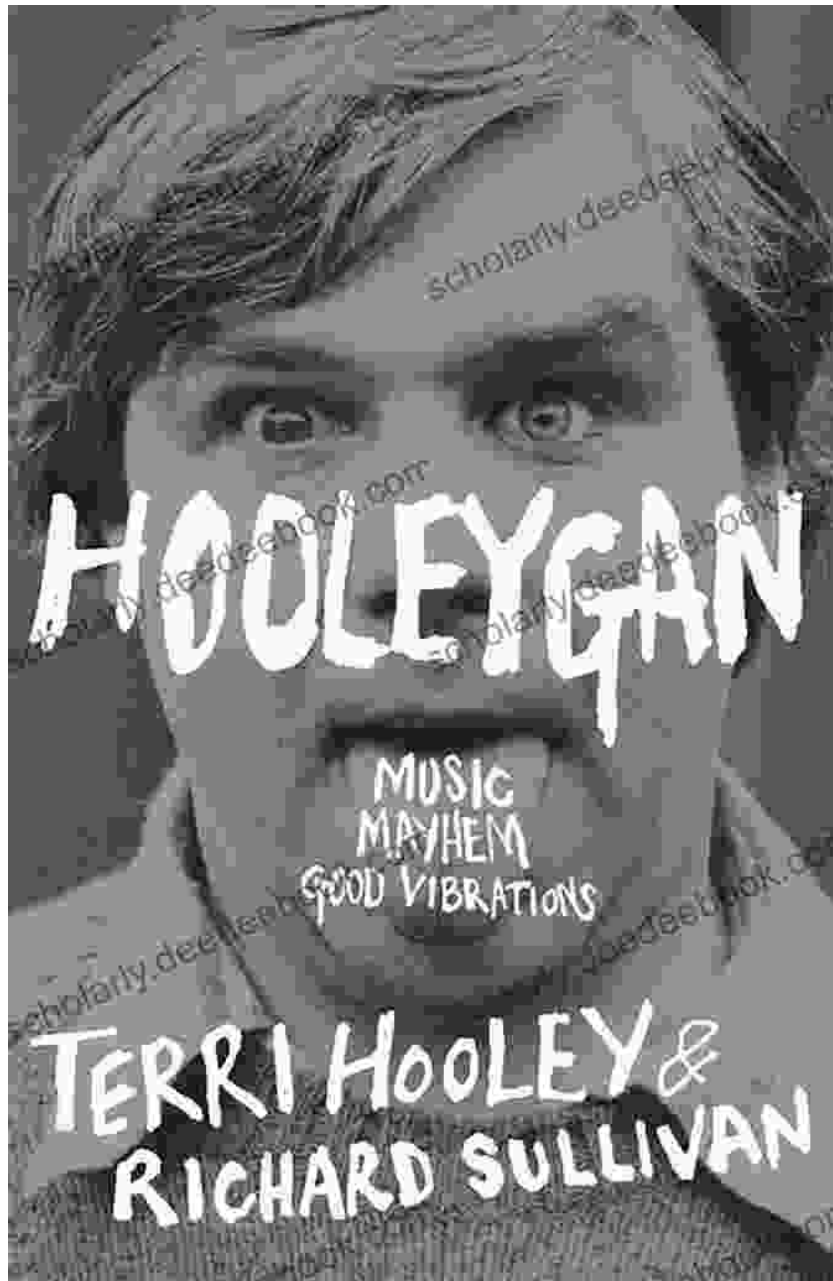

The third band of the night was New York City's The Dictators, who delivered a set of classic rock 'n' roll that had the crowd singing along to every word. The band's tight musicianship and energetic performance was a highlight of the night, and they left the crowd wanting more. The final band of the night was Dallas's own Reverend Horton Heat, who closed out the show with a set of their signature psychobilly rock 'n' roll. The band's high-energy performance was the perfect way to end the night, and they left the crowd exhausted but exhilarated.

Hooleygan Music Mayhem: Good Vibrations was a night of pure rock 'n' roll mayhem that will not soon be forgotten. The lineup of high-energy bands kept the crowd on their feet all night long, and the raucous performance left everyone in attendance begging for more.
