Teaching Career

Inspired by the transformative power of education, Pick embarked on a teaching career that would span over five decades. In 1880, she joined the Ursuline Sisters of Mount Saint Joseph and was assigned to teach at St. Patrick's School in St. Louis.

As an educator, Pick possessed an unwavering commitment to academic excellence. She believed that all students, regardless of gender or social background, deserved the opportunity to reach their full potential. Her innovative teaching methods and dedication to her students earned her widespread respect and admiration.

Women's Rights Activism

Beyond her teaching responsibilities, Pick became an ardent advocate for women's rights. In the 1890s, she joined the National American Woman Suffrage Association (NAWSA) and became a vocal supporter of the movement for women's suffrage.

Pick utilized her platform as an educator and community leader to promote the cause of women's equality. She gave speeches, wrote articles, and organized rallies to raise awareness about the need for women to have the right to vote.

Founding of Ursuline College

In 1909, Pick founded Ursuline College in Louisville, Kentucky. The college was one of the first Catholic institutions of higher education for women in the United States. As its first president, Pick dedicated herself to providing women with access to a rigorous and transformative education.

Under Pick's leadership, Ursuline College quickly gained a reputation for academic excellence and social responsibility. It became a hub for intellectual and cultural exchange, empowering women to become leaders in their communities and professions.

National Recognition

Pick's contributions to education and women's rights earned her national recognition. In 1930, she received the Laetare Medal, the highest honor bestowed by the University of Notre Dame on Catholic lay persons.

In 1940, President Franklin D. Roosevelt appointed Pick to the National Advisory Committee on Education. As a member of the committee, she played a vital role in shaping educational policy during World War II.

Legacy

Sister Sarah Pick's legacy continues to inspire generations of educators and activists. Her pioneering spirit, her unwavering commitment to women's rights, and her dedication to academic excellence transformed the lives of countless individuals.

Today, Ursuline College stands as a testament to Pick's vision and unwavering belief in the transformative power of education. Her legacy lives on through the countless women who have benefited from the opportunities she created and the values she instilled in them.
